I'm speaking with Bryce Chadwick-Wilsby, Antifa's new PR Manager. Bryce, what a stunt! What inspired this daring act of insurrection?

During a deeply meaningful psychedelic experience, my ego was obliterated. Shattered. A mere husk of a man remaining. But over the next few minutes, I rebuilt myself. I am you. I am all. I am not. And for the rest of my time on this comely Earth, I will help you, all of you, unleash your Personal Brand.

Mr. Chadwick-Wilsby...

Please, just Bryce. Formality creates hierarchy, which I'm totally not about. The issue is not race, class, or violence. Where others see a revolution, I see an opportunity to look past our differences and live as one. But I also think it's important to show the world your true, unique self, which is why I offer Personal Brand Coaching™ to all you young influencers! his revolutionary work in the BLM movement. Surprisingly, despite his boyish good looks, Bryce is not a hit with the ladies. In one survey, 82% of Portland teen girls aged 13-17 considered him a "bootlicking little bourgeoisie cuck suckling at the teat of the capitalist machine", while the remaining 18% felt only "significant disdain." But their moderate liberal parents have kind

Alright, pigs. You're not very popular right now, what with the murdering and all. Your tweets are memes in themselves. But never fear. If I can rebrand Antifa, this'll be badminton on a breezeless afternoon.

Brian Geery, sir. I mean, Comrade Bryce.

Brian, what are your hobbies and interests?

I like NASCAR.

I want you all to look within yourselves. You're not just a faceless mass of terror and dystopian oppression anymore. You're individuals, each with your own unique charisma. You, what's your name?

Uh, let's come back to this. Uniforms! We'll bring in some nostalgia. For some mystifying reason, the teens are going apeshit for cowboys right now. I was thinking we could do a riff on the wild, wild West. A callback to this fine state's glory days.

Air Bud, beloved golden retriever from the 1997 film Air Bud, was shot and killed by officer Brian Geery last night while shielding former police chief Bryce from a stun grenade. His vigil has gathered the largest crowd we've ever witnessed.

Tens of thousands of Multnomah County residents crowd downtown Portland to mourn this great loss, most of whom had previously expressed no concern for police brutality, racism, or humanity in general. This heinous act of violence was shocking and completely unprecedented. Buddy, you will be missed.
